Concert of Love

The vibrant colors of the town of Cuzco and the valley of Chucuito hide a very interesting place. The caves of Aguas Calientes, with their stalactites and stalagmites, are a tribute to nature's wonder. Rivers are venerated and purified. They borders are thick with vegetation, and the air is filled with the fragrance of incense. This is where their fragrance and beauty, peace and purity is breathed everywhere. Bananquitos, longhairs, spaniels, and beagle dogs fill the air with beautiful songs. What boundless fun!

Many years ago, a Taibo girl lived near these caves. They had a peaceful life. Men in took care of everything while women hunted for food. The chief of the village had a daughter named Majapococha.

Majapococha was a beautiful Taibo girl. Her beauty was soft and sweet. Her black, straight hair hung over the top of her shoulders. She enjoyed singing in the surrounding hills with her choir. In every place,

Every day, the Taibo girls were running around the hills. One day, she heard the hummingbird sing. The boy who knew that the girl was delighted every time he heard its melodious song.

One day Majapococha went for a walk near the hills. She stopped with a rock that was near one of the cave's mouth. As once, she stopped and began to sit in the shade of the rock. She was so happy that she did not notice that the water from the rocks was falling down. Before her body sank into the rocks, Yochidi, the hummingbird, flew over the waters and purred down through the mountain's crack and flowed between the rocks. A tender voice said,

The village celebrated every year as in the past the birth of Majapococha. The hunting bird was the main attraction of the celebration because of a special eye. Since that day, it always sings to the Taibo girl. She responds to the song and dances around the village with strings of wisteria. Together they offer an inviolable concert of love.

Discovering the Value of Others

Human beings open their eyes to a new day every day. Each morning is filled with the click of birds that signal the first steps of people walking to get their job done, with drivers, with students, with workers, and unemployed people that are out just to meet their destination in life.

There is much truth in the statement that one needs to stop and consider the interests of those near us. Our duty is to do our best to understand their needs. We cannot be the ones to judge others. Instead, we must be the ones to accept them. We cannot be the ones to judge others. Instead, we must be the ones to accept them.

The day begins by me not noticing about the importance of the hat that I was wearing. That is in fact what we should do each day instead of paying attention to ourselves. That is in fact what we should do each day instead of paying attention to ourselves. That is in fact what we should do each day instead of paying attention to ourselves. That is in fact what we should do each day instead of paying attention to ourselves.

Every day, there is something that we can do for others. Every day, there is something that we can do for others. Every day, there is something that we can do for others. Every day, there is something that we can do for others. Every day, there is something that we can do for others. Every day, there is something that we can do for others. Every day, there is something that we can do for others. Every day, there is something that we can do for others. Every day, there is something that we can do for others.

Without Roots

As soon as Sophia passed away, the stone was for the door. She never knew that Meddy was missing. She stayed away all night waiting for her to come back. She did not know where to go. After many days of searching for her, she could not find a single trace of her. She was very worried about her grandmother. She could not bear to be alone with her. She didn't want to be alone in a moment like this. She needed support from those who are closer than her.

I tried to calm her down and reminded her how Meddy usually took longer to get back home. She was still worried about her grandmother. They say that what we give is what we get. Her older daughter caused her to feel bad about herself.

There was no way she could comfort Sophia. Once I had the pressure of getting to work on time, I never thought about her. But she again spoke to me not to worry. But this was not enough. Sophia had been gone for more than a week. I had to leave her alone for a few minutes. She was still worried about her grandmother. She was still worried about her grandmother.

I tried to kiss the dress, but could imagine what Sophia's face would look like if I did. I had already impressed when I met Meddy. She was a good person. She was a good person.

Memories of Grandma

The protruding veins in her hands revealed that she had lived nearly a century. The streaks on her forehead unveiled her worries, thoughts, and emotions. The wrinkles on her face told the story of the long and hard life she had lived. Although she walked slowly, she did not show any weakness. She woke up early to infuse the morning with the aroma of the coffee she prepared. She cleaned the house with the same energy as a young woman. She washed clothes with the same enthusiasm as a mother. She cleaned the room. Still, she carried out her chores like a youthful housewife.

At the break of day, she greeted her husband looking plants. Then she prepared the vanilla she enjoyed eating at luncheon. She also took care of her garden. She was a good gardener. She grew all kinds of vegetables in the house she had planted, bananas, pumpkins, chayotes, amarillo, and coffee. Grandma transformed when it was time to pick up coffee beans. She collected the beans in a basket and washed them. She had a small hut that belonged to Grandpa, which protected her from the sun and the tiny abayarde flees. She also put her socks and boots to avoid the humidity of the jungle.
